have restricted myself to definitions and concepts, rather than. 2. PCG 90-99, 1996, 1999 (and eventually) Then it was generalized to be multiplicative amplification. The generalization is in place to make it a geometric term: the n-cube becomes a nth power of a unit cube. The term is multivalued, because its vertexes represent an infinite set of vertices. The simplest generalization uses two vertices: the vertex A and the vertex B. The generalization is ABAB...; ABABAB... and so on. The generalization allows the definition of an algebra. In the case of matrices, it describes a number n_1 and a number n_2 such that $n_1^2 + n_2^2 = n^2$ (n is the square root of n^2). If one of the numbers is negative, then the square root is not defined. This is used to solve the problem of diverging angles in parallelograms. A square root of a negative quantity is not defined. If the square root of a negative quantity is defined, then a negative quantity exists in the first place. Thus, if there is a negative quantity, it means that the square root is not defined, and this is a contradiction, i.e. there is no square root of a negative quantity. Also, a special simple root exists, for positive numbers, which is the number that when raised to the power of itself equals the square of the positive number. Thus, 4 is the square root of 4, for the fourth root of 4 is 4. For a negative number, the fourth root is defined only if the square root of the negative number is also defined. The general root of the negative number is $-1/4$. The generalization of the complex number i is the generalization of -1
