The music group Beastie Boys is back in the Supreme Court to argue it does not have to pay money damages to Adidas. The case is being heard by nine justices of the UK's highest court after Adidas lost a trademark infringement case in the UK's Court of Appeal. The two bands claimed the German sportswear company's name "confused consumers" by selling sneakers with the same "WOW" logo. The case was brought by lawyers acting on behalf of the US group. Judge Christopher Hatton ruled in April 2012 that Adidas's "WOW" logo was confusingly similar to the group's "BEAST" mark, although he did not grant the American group the full protection they were seeking. Not Puma In a ruling last week, Lord Justice Keith agreed with Adidas's lawyers that the German company did not infringe on the Beastie Boys' "WOW" trademark. And he said the US group's argument that Adidas's original 12-word design for the WOW logo, which was slightly different to the "BEAST" logo, breached UK design regulations, was "incorrect and unhelpful". The Supreme Court is hearing the case because Lord Justice Keith, who retired from the Court of Appeal in September, could have taken the case to appeal. The band has welcomed the Supreme Court's ruling and said it would be "appreciative of a return to dealing with the issue on the merits". The band has said it is "apprehensive that the Supreme Court may focus on certain aspects of the UK decision, such as how much weight should be accorded to the similarities in the ways in which the designs were presented, the websites, the colour of the marks and overall likelihood of confusion". The Supreme Court is hearing the case at the Royal Courts of Justice in London.Hurricane Irma Sweep Near Key US East Coast Cities Seen as 'Hitting Areas of Greatest Consequence' By Vanessa Luhrs Aug. 24, 2017 3:19 p.m. ET (Updated at 4:27 p.m.) The most powerful Atlantic Ocean hurricane ever recorded hit the eastern coast of Florida, cutting a path of destruction and billions of dollars of damage that is threatening to Device Used: Assessment schedule: All patients will be seen for a colposcopy evaluation on the study day. Those patients who are found to have CIN 1 or greater will be treated immediately.
