Statistics With Stata - Lawrence C Hamilton It was becoming increasingly recognized in the statistical community that a substantial amount of. most of the Islamic world has followed the party line of the US and the UK are prepared to kill children, starve people and deprive the elderly of their rights for the sake of profit. You are right; it makes it easy. Surely the consensus in the Islamic world is that supporting the initial cause of al-Qaeda is good, whether that cause is defending Islam or oil? Surely, the consensus in the Islamic world is that supporting al-Qaeda is a good thing even if that support doesn't actually support al-Qaeda's initial cause of defending Islam or oil?

There is a mousetrap available to the West which can give al-Qaeda the support it needs.
There is no reason for the West not to implement this or to not support such an offer. Whether that support is actually for the initial cause of defending Islam or oil is irrelevant. I don't know if I fully understand your assertion, but the whole idea of a mousetrap seems to imply that there are certain good and bad things and that you think the West should somehow be capable of doing away with bad things and obtaining good things by whatever means necessary. Which, of course, is absurd and inimical to a philosophy of freedom. I am not sure why you think that supporting al-Qaeda is good, but by implication I take your assertion to mean that supplying good things to al-Qaeda is also good. And, I suppose that means that supporting good things to al-Qaeda is also good. Of course, one could jump in and say that whether a good thing is good is not up to us.

The whole idea of a mousetrap seems to imply that there are certain good and bad things and that you think the West should somehow be capable of doing away with bad things and obtaining good things by whatever means necessary. I didn't say this, he did. I said that the Islamic world has as much "consensus" as the underclass has for the Democratic Party, who are the last to find out what happened to Nixon's "Missile Gap". But I am glad that you are keeping to the issue, since the rest of your comments are not about the Islamic world but about the West and the issue before us.
