all that being said, i would highly recommend this software to anyone just starting out. if youre editing on premiere and jumping into media composer, its not a bad option to check out the basics. if you're coming into media composer from final cut pro, then, yeah, it doesnt take much time to get up and running. with the current state of the market, there is no reason you cannot edit your videos in media composer. it is a perfect option for anyone just starting out, but even for those of us who have been using it for quite some time. for the price, its a steal for anyone just getting into the software, and it doesnt require the $3,000 usd annual license that the premiere pro and fcpX suites require. please, do yourself a favor and check it out. please, do yourself a favor and check out this software and, if you have any questions, let me know. if youre a student and youre using media composer for your school projects, i will be more than happy to help you with your concerns. if youre a video editor or a content creator working on a slow computer, you may have already found that media composer can be a huge time suck. while theres a lot to like about avid media composer, theres no reason why you cant use more than one nle at the same time, you just have to set it up right. while avid media composer is a great nle, i need my computer to run like a champ. its not uncommon for me to have media composer first running on a desktop and a second copy of media composer running on my laptop. while i love davinci resolve, its slow on my machine and i find that its just not as powerful as avid media composer in the editing department. 5ec8ef588b
