artificial reperfusion for cardiogenic shock: a case report. A case of a patient with cardiogenic shock with chronic anteroseptal myocardial infarction is presented. To relieve the acute circulation disturbance, artificial reperfusion was performed via the left and right femoral artery by the use of a temporary bifemoral bypass. He recovered from cardiogenic shock and was discharged from the hospital without surgical intervention. This technique may be considered as a temporary alternative to open heart surgery in an emergency. This invention relates to medical fluids. In particular it relates to a system and method for determining the presence of microorganisms f988f36e3a
